The large number of mutual fund schemes and types in the market can make it challenging for investors, especially those who are just starting out, to identify investment opportunities. For those who are looking to access long-term growth potential while mitigating risk, large and mid cap funds can be a suitable option. These funds seek to combine risk and reward by investing in relatively stable large-cap companies as well as growing mid-cap companies.

Bajaj Finserv Large and Mid Cap Fund follows a unique moat investing strategy, identifying and investing in companies that have strong competitive advantages.

This article tells you more about the Bajaj Finserv Large and Mid Cap Fund and how to invest in it.

What are large and mid-cap funds

Large and mid-cap funds are mutual funds that invest in a mix of large and mid-sized companies. Large-cap companies are well-established businesses that tend to be industry leaders. This makes them relatively stable. On the other hand, mid-cap companies are those that are still in a stage of rapid expansion and have the potential to turn into large-cap companies in the future. These companies come with a higher growth potential but also carry a greater risk compared to large-cap companies.

Investing in such a fund helps investors to combine the relative stability of large cap companies with the enhanced growth potential of mid caps.

Moat investing and Bajaj Finserv Large and Mid Cap Fund

To further optimize this risk-reward balance, the Bajaj Finserv Large and Mid Cap Fund follows a most investing strategy.

A moat, in economics, refers to a competitive advantage that can protect a company's market position. Just like a castle's moat keeps invaders out, a business moat prevents competitors from eating into a company's market share. This could be due to several factors like a strong brand image, patented products, high customer loyalty, significant cost advantages, or a technological edge.

Fund managers select companies that have strong moats. Through this, they seek to build a relatively resilient portfolio comprising companies that can provide relatively stable growth in the long term, with less vulnerability to volatility. They also seek out companies that have the capacity to expand upon and build their competitive edge. Here are some of the features of such companies:

Pricing power: These companies can set or increase prices with minimal impact on the demand for their goods or services.

Market dominance: These businesses hold leading positions in their respective industries, often commanding a significant share of the market.

Leadership strength: Competent management teams play a crucial role in enhancing these companies competitive edge.

Innovation: By embracing innovation, these companies respond flexibly to evolving market conditions.

Such companies can therefore be more resilient to economic downturns as their competitive advantages can create a bugger against market fluctuations, mitigating overall portfolio risk.
